

A CAT'S TALE ©Xen. 4th draft

One fine day, a worldly old cat walking down an alley noticed a self-absorbed kitten running in circles madly chasing something. Bemused the experienced feline sat down to watch this scene. By the bye, the youngster stopped to catch its breath; so, the world-wise cat asked, “What are you doing?” The other one replied, “ I am seeking happiness. You see, cat school taught me that bliss is in my tail; so, I chase it trying to catch the joy of life.” For a moment, the mature one pondered this thought then replied, “I have never been to school; however, you are correct about contentment being in one’s tail. Although unlike you, I do not need to chase after it; because in choosing to do what makes the most sense to me in every moment – happiness follows every where I go.”
